Charles J. Senkier, who just after this country entered the war resigned his position as superintendent of the commercial department of the Fairmont Printing and Publishing Company to enter the Marine corps is back in Fairmont for a short stay and is being warmly greeted by his many friends.

After Senkier got to the marine training station and was about to settle down to the business of being a sea soldier, conditions at his home in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., took such a turn that his presence there was necessary and the authorities released him. Since then he has been at his home in Poughkeepsie. He has come to Fairmont to help the Fairmont Printing and Publishing Company over the turn of the year in the position made vacant by the resignation of Harry E. Engle, now assistant cashier of the Fairmont State bank, and the departure of H. Robb Furman, who enlisted a few days after becoming Mr. Engle's successor.

Mr. Senkier's familiarity with all the plant details will make his assistance at this time very valuable.
